

ART Photos From Beat Nite, Bushwick Galleries' Big Night Out

Posted by Benjamin Sutton on Wed, Feb 23, 2011

On Friday night large groups of artists descended on Bushwick—or, rather, stepped outside their studios and walked a couple blocks to nearby DIY, artist-run galleries—for the fifth Beat Nite, an evening-long event organized by Jason Andrew of Norte Maar and Storefront in the style of Dumbo's "First Thursdays," Williamsburg's "Second Fridays" and every Thursday in Chelsea. Friday's Beat Nite was very well-attended (even the cops came out), and though a couple spaces were missing from the ten-gallery roster, there were also two brand new spaces (Curbs and Stoops, and Fortress to Solitude). See (almost) all of them in this epic photo tour...

A neon behind etched glass piece by Joseph Kosuth (!).
