Dimitri Kozyrev, Last One #4, 2010, acrylic on canvas, 183 x 153 cm

Breese Little is delighted to announce Dimitri Kozyrev's first solo exhibition in London. Presenting recent canvases and a selection of drawings, Dimitri Kozyrev will introduce the Tucson-based artist's practise where the inheritance of modern history and the avant-garde collide in colourful abstraction.

Born in St Petersburg and trained in California, Kozyrev negotiates his Soviet roots at the intersection between physical and mental landscapes. Expansive vistas are constructed with flat, planar passages overlaid by bright slices and geometric forms. Clues of familiarity are disrupted with a change in direction or palette, overriding coherent interpretation but suggesting splinters of memory. Nevertheless, hints of sparse fir trees and hunched figures are handled alike, charting the impact of the ruins of war on human and geographical memory.

Kozyrev draws parallels between the current political and military polemic and past totalitarian regimes, employing elements of Cubist and Constructivist artistic styles in this dialogue. Referencing Duchamp and Malevich, Kozyrev questions the direction of the 'cutting edge' of contemporary art, which he perceives to have been blunted in recent years. His post-industrial drawings offer scenes of decrepit buildings abandoned in the detritus of departed civilisation, their functionality withdrawn and slow decay inevitable. Without the electric warmth of the painted scenes, these bleak corners are forgotten scars waiting to be reclaimed by their surroundings.

Dimitri Kozyrev (b. 1967, Leningrad, USSR) lives and works in Tucson, AZ. He received his MFA from the University of California, Santa Barbara (2000) and BFA from Ohio University, Athens (1997).
