

“Go West” Featuring Kris Kuksi and David Ellis at Mark Moore Gallery

by Nastia Voynovskaya Posted on July 13, 2012

The Arousal of De-evolution by Kris Kuksi

The second installment of a bicoastal collaboration between two prominent galleries, the two person show “Go West” opens at Mark Moore Gallery in Culver City this Saturday featuring Kris Kuksi (Hi-Fructose vol. 19) and David Ellis. Curated by New York’s Joshua Liner Gallery, the show will be a follow-up to “Go East” curated by Mark Moore earlier this year.

Though Kuksi and Ellis might seem like an unlikely match, the two artists draw from distinct epochs from art history to create highly detailed, pristine artworks that match one another in technical skill and innovative use of their respective media. Kris Kuksi’s assemblages combine myriad figures of different proportions in altar-like compositions that recall the sculptures in Gothic cathedrals. David Ellis’ 2d work and installations (including his famous trash sound sculptures, in which trash cans make automated rhythms on a loop), however, have a modernist sensibility that the artist relates to his love of music, especially hip-hop and jazz. Take a look at our preview images courtesy of Mark Moore Gallery.

Busted Plume installation by David Ellis

Source: <http://hifructose.com/2012/07/13/go-west-featuring-kris-kuksi-and-david-ellis-at-mark-moore-gallery/>